MADISON & GROW
“This wallpaper is printed on responsibly sourced, chlorine-free fibers with water-based inks and textiles, and silk-screened on 100 percent linen, all by hand. It’s just all-around awesome.”

FERRICK MASON
“I love these textiles that are printed on linen in L.A. with water-based inks and dyes as opposed to the toxic versions that get into our water supply.”

In Her Element

When it comes to projects like the spa and president’s suite at the Casa del Mar and her growing roster of eco-focused clients, Rachel Winokur of Etta Designs puts the earth and great style at the top of the list. “So much is out there right now that there’s no reason to not be predominantly sustainable about design,” Winokur says. The Massachusetts-born designer, who once worked at Michael Smith’s studio, is branching out with Design Wars, a new HGTV show that premieres this November. Winokur will also preside over L.A.’s Opportunity Green conference next month (Nov. 9-11, opportunitygreen.com). So who are her sustainable sources for fab style? We had to ask. —Alexandria Abramian-Mott

THE GET

Tangled Up Tord Boontje’s Tangle lighting struck design gold when it was first introduced. Now the Dutch designer is back with Tangle Globe, a pendant light that contains a profusion of etched metal within a glass dome.
